I'm surprised at how often (on iOS 7.0) the view is rotated into landscape mode despite the image is clearly in portrait mode. [self.layer removeAllAnimations]; [self renderToUIImageWithContext:UIGraphicsGetCurrentContext()]; UIImage* image = [self.imageManager.mImageCache cachedImageNamed:self.imageName]; UIGraphicsEndInitImageContext(); [self.layer addAnimation:self.animation forKey:@"animate"]; // draw image [self.layer setNeedsDisplay]; I've tried creating the image context with size = self.frame.size, size = self.layer.bounds.size and size = self.view.bounds.size but the problem still occurs. My goal is to force the image to be loaded in my custom image view in its original orientation and have it be rotated into portrait mode only when it is loaded. A: It looks like your problem is that you're calling -setNeedsDisplay after you add the animation. The view is not rotated unless the update method is called, which then causes the view to be rotated. 99]{} C. M. Bender and S. A.
