It can create some cool effects, fix problems, and enhance your images and videos. This section gives you some pointers on how to make the most of Photoshop when you're crafting images of your own. ## A Handy Color Picker Photoshop gives you color controls that enable you to display color values in the way that you like, and then you can see whether your colors fall within the range of colors you want them to be. In Photoshop, the color picker (Figure 3-4) looks pretty much the same as the one in Windows Paint. From the tools menu at the top of the window, choose Color. (If you don't see the tool there, choose Window menu, and then choose Color.) You'll see the color selection box in the center of the window, and the white square at the left is the color swatch; when you click the swatch, the color box changes to the color of the selected swatch. If you click the right button of your mouse (so you have two fingers), the box turns blue, which means it's full of colors to choose from. Click around on the color box to see the color names. You can move the color box with the mouse, or you can click one of the swatches at the bottom of the box to view its color, and click inside the box to move the swatch to a different spot. PV modules often are designed to survive temperature changes of  $\pm 150^\circ\text{C}$ , or greater. Design criteria, including the solar spectrum and thermal environment, vary by design, system size, and other factors. Solar cells are sensitive to both short and long-term temperatures, as they change electrical properties over time. Shock heating of PV modules during transportation or handling may be a significant source of damage. As a result, many current solar system designs limit PV module exposure to lower than desirable temperatures. One significant design aspect involves limiting PV module exposure to temperature fluctuations. Systems that are designed to operate reliably over a period of time may also experience temperature swings. In one example, closed-loop systems are tested

Sales Krystle McKibbon and her husband John had their first child last September, a little girl they named Brynn. The beautiful baby is a miracle of joy for the McKibbon family, and we were pleased to cover her birth in our third year of publication. "No one will ever be the same," Krystle said, reflecting on their little girl's impact on their lives. "There's never been such a thing that's changed how I'm feeling. I'm grateful for her, and I'm glad I got to be there with her." As Krystle was growing up in the town of Weldon, she grew to love the Barrows River, and the Barrows National Grassland. "It just has this serenity about it, and a history," she explained. "It's just beautiful." Krystle plans to be a lawyer, but she spends her spare time volunteering at the Weldon Community Center. When Brynn was born, Krystle started a baby photography business, and the rest is history. One of the newest members of the family is a Siberian husky puppy named Finn. He was found abandoned by their friend Charles Flynn, and the two soon became fast friends. "He has a spirit like none other," Krystle said. "We try to stay as consistent as possible, but we don't try to enforce that with him. He definitely knows what makes him happy and what makes him sad, and he's definitely a good kid." Krystle's family and friends often visit the family on weekends, and it's fun to see how the McKibbon family has adjusted to life in the Barrows.Pages Saturday, July 16, 2016 Nim is a language-inspired language for the visual programming language NumPy.
