Caught during a live webcast last week, Nexon CEO Minshul Cho made some surprising comments about Injustice 2 and the future of the NetherRealm Studio, stating that he doesn't "love or hate" the game. "I'll try to be objective here, the game is too difficult, it's not fun, it's a grind," Minshul shared, before admitting that his job is "trying to keep the studio profitable," and that he's been doing just that by pushing for more content for a longer period of time than originally planned, which will continue into the next game in the series. However, he was quick to add that, "I don't think they will end up with two or three games a year." Not only that, but he also noted that the game has generated "more than a billion dollars" in its first two months, which means that the future for the studio is looking very bright. That said, he also acknowledged the "outrage" from some, and his response was to "pray for them." (Kotaku) I'm not going to sit here and try to sell you on whether you'll enjoy it or not. It's not a question of that - it is what it is. I
