The genre traces its origins to hip hop and rap groups in the late 1980s and early 1990s, such as Brooklyn's The Fat Boys and The Lox. Aggression.xm music was comparable to the later rap-metal sounds of the 1990s, particularly on the West Coast. Aggression.xm music was often characterized by strong, malevolent themes of sex, violence, and street life. The style became popular among disenfranchised white youth, and the genre is associated with the West Coast subculture known as "thug life". Although Black men initially were the main voice of the aggressive.xm movement, white rappers such as B.T.B. (Black Together Be Aggressive), M.L.C. (Mind over matter Certified) and Bone Thugs-n-Harmony took off with the genre. After a couple of years of growth, many rappers came out and left the genre such as Raekwon (of the Wu-Tang Clan), aka Rakim, Prince Paul and the Nature Boys. Development of the genre B.T.B. (Black Together Be Aggressive) was the first and one of the most famous members of the genre. Initially, the group began as a joke with the rapper, B.T.B., having a label named "Black Together Be Aggressive Records" and a logo resembling the double crossed "B" on a snake's c9d1549cdd

Williams has had to fight multiple opponents over the past decade. From her first singles match in 2005, Williams has never played a single match as the same person. Serena Williams on Monday lost in the second round of the Australian Open, to a player ranked 15 in the world. But against which opponent did she have to fight the most to win? Here's a look back at the uneven story of Williams' career: 2005: Lost to "just a little girl from Port Arthur" In 2005, Williams begins her professional career as an 18-year-old outsider on the Australian tennis circuit. That initial loss — a tough battle on the Roland Garros clay courts against Kristina Barrois, a French 14th seed — was tough for Williams to get through. But the win was even more surprising. According to local media reports, "An Incredibly Tough Task" was how Tennis magazine described the match. It wasn't a great win, but Williams beat the tough Barrois, who had a career-high 52 unforced errors. Williams' rise was astounding, but few expected she could beat three different 14th-seeded players in a single month. By February, she'd reached a Grand Slam final in her second event — the Australian Open. Williams' quest to become the first unseeded player to reach a major final continued. That year, Williams won the three majors, reaching consecutive Grand Slam crowns at the U.S. Open, French Open and Wimbledon, becoming only the sixth left-hander to do so and the first player to win three straight slams in a single year. She was also the biggest favorite to win the Australian Open, then called the WTA Championships. That's because Williams had been ranked No. 1 in the world for 10 months. There's not an Australian Open since that hasn't been won by the world No. 1, yet Williams was unseeded. She was ranked No. 4. Her run ended in the final against Liu Fangzhou, an unseeded Chinese player ranked 262. But Williams lost in a grueling five-set semifinal to the eventual champion, Martina Hingis, in which both players were chasing their first major title. Despite the first major loss on the tour — it was a moment of realization for Williams that the long climb from 14
