Midiaata Kydney Robinson is a sports writer and can be reached at Short-term finasteride administration decreases estradiol-17 beta secretion by porcine granulosa cells: evidence for gonadotropin stimulation of estradiol synthesis in the pig. Fractionated porcine granulosa cells from ovaries collected at different stages of estrous cycle were cultured for 24 h in the presence of gonadotropins in order to study short-term responses of cells to exogenous estradiol (E2), either alone (all tested concentrations) or in combination with dehydroepiandrosterone (DHEA). Regardless of the culture period, FSH (100 ng/ml) induced high amounts of estradiol (E2), whereas LH (10 ng/ml) had no effect. E2 secretion was also stimulated at later stage of culture (2nd and 3rd day). Addition of bovine serum albumin (BSA), DHEA or plasma (10-40% v/v) to culture medium had no significant effect on E2 secretion, while addition of medroxyprogesterone acetate (MPA, 1 microgram/ml) increased the levels of E2. Insulin (1 microgram/ml) was able to induce E2 secretion at all stages of culture period (with no effect on progesterone secretion). A 10 microM concentration of finasteride completely inhibited E2 secretion induced by the different
