Any combination of ARGB Images can be set as a 'Pack' to create a single image to use as a 'Packed Texture'. Grid and Mesh Tile Mapping: Each 'Pack' can be placed on a 'Grid', Tile Mapping is available when a 'Pack' is used with Grid. This gives a more defined and packed/loose design on the Image which gives a better experience in regards to Resolution, Level of detail. Random Maps are also an option for more anorganic textures, with more freedom for tiling. Designing Your Pack xPack Texture Packer is optimized to work in conjunction with Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Illustrator, Adobe Fireworks and some of the major game engines, such as Unreal Engine. Just draw your textures and groups and you're done!

Generating Configurations Just select your image file and start adding your assets to the design. Once you've added all your images, the generator will begin creating your configuration file to tell your creation how your image will be placed on the background. This file will contain all the information of how your Pack will be placed and how the pack is attached to the tile maps.

Auto Loading Pack All texture packs must be built in a certain way so xPack can quickly optimize your packed texture for the engine you are using. If you're building a texture in the same way as before you need to use the Auto Loader. After creating a Texture Pack in a different way the general rules for the Auto Loader are not applied, so you need to use the Auto Loader if you want to have it done automatically.

Using the Auto Loader With the Loader you can quickly pack texture with different configuration and either using a preset or you can create your own pack in the way you like, for example you can add more images and use your own methods for packing and placing the packs. The Loader is pretty straightforward and you have the basic rules to follow when creating your texture pack, you need to make sure you always keep a view of the Textures in your pack in mind. If you're not sure about something you're packing for sure you can try it out before you publish your texture. Save and Export Once you're done with your texture pack you can save it, preview it and export it into your engine. If you have any questions or issues with the generator, you can always

There are some posts here in Tournament Masters on their own blog. So I thought I'd post here as well. I just never seemed to make a thread about it and happened to mention it in Tournament Masters. Rules are subject to change with each iteration of FG. I'll be updating the thread as I go. This is an absolute bonanza for players that like to share their ideas, trends, and ideas in casual games. Rule alterations as an improvement can always be rejected. I like the same approach of all RPs. I like the fact it eliminates just one aspect (tolerance), which gives me more options. Am I the only one that would like to see a tournament mode? I'd like to have the ability to play 3 or 4 players in a ring instead of having the same old scenario as in CoC4E. Also, a map with more variety such as the forest and more forest forts instead of underground runways. Rules and alternates for 2E. A few "tournament" tournaments were actually played, especially CoC7E with rules variance that would lead to a shootout (Such as use the tournament deck making your deck the loser). There were even some counters made, though the flavor of the alternative side attributes had various insanities such as "Aggressive Defensive", "Useful Control", "Passionate Strike", "Minimal" and so on. With the alternate field rules in 3E. The main complaint about 6E was that it incorporated the economy system and war's were fast, hard hitting and fast. There is already a stream of 4E discussion. If 4E is the way it goes in Fantasy Grounds, I'd like to take a look at 2E. I'm sure it's barely touched on with CoC7E.
