That's a record for early-year buying since the beginning of the modern bull market, just over a month ago, according to a weekly report from Ned Davis Research "We're in the first quarter of the year, and the [Investment Grade] benchmark is registering its highest first-quarter value since 2011," Amanda Agius, the senior technical strategist on the report said. "While we're still in the bear market for 2016, we do think that it's looking up." The report uses a model that looks for momentum from the previous week's closing price to compute the latest benchmark level. "The IID [Investment Grade Index] has never been higher than 96.12 [in late December]. Since it has never held a value below 68 in the last two years, there's rarely a use for a bear market," Agius said. A healthy first quarter for U.S. stocks would add to a boost from Friday's trade deal between the United States and China. The deal, brokered by the White House, would result in much of the tariff's removal. "If there's one event that could change the trajectory of the market, it's [the] trade deal," Agius said. "We're seeing some initial signs that it might start to work."Q: MySQL Select with LEFT JOIN return Uncaught Error: Row count must
