North-east England's world famous industrial heritage sites are under threat from the government's drive for cheap energy, engineers and scientists have warned. From Teesside, where Jiggles the Jellycat was first created, to Redcar, which produced the world's first tarmac road, to the giant Vauxhall car factory at Luton which produced some of the world's first luxury cars, there are hundreds of factories that have been transformed the world. But as the government prepares to ramp up its drive for low-carbon power, and the global price of gas soars, some of Britain's most famous industrial heritage sites are at risk, according to the UK's leading engineers, scientists and academics. They write in a report for the campaign group Better Place: 'The unheralded transformation of the UK's landscape will continue unless the government changes course and radically changes direction. The pace of change and the scale of risk we face is unprecedented.' Angus McCallum, of the Campaign to Protect Rural England, said: 'This report reveals some of the most important and threatened industrial sites. Many of the sites speak to our understanding of how the industrial revolution unfolded and how we now live. They define our national character as a people.' As the government becomes increasingly keen to promote electricity generated by renewable energy sources, the report warns that huge investments in offshore wind farms, tidal power, floating wind turbines, tidal barrages and other low-carbon schemes risk 'needless destruction' of Britain's industrial heritage. At the same time, the government is calling for nuclear power stations to come online as soon as possible, and is considering tidal barrages as an alternative to building new nuclear power stations. At the same time, the government is calling for nuclear power stations to come online as soon as possible, and is considering tidal barrages as an alternative to building new nuclear power stations. Speaking at the launch of the report, Dr Ian Pearson, of the

1. To draw a line in Photoshop, you need to press Shift and right-click in the image window, and select the Line tool from the options that appear. Alternatively, you can press Ctrl and click the Line tool. 2. As you can see, your Line tool resembles a pencil. To draw a straight line, click and then drag the mouse; to move in a circle, just click the mouse and drag. To draw a curved line, press the Shift key and drag. 3. To erase the line, click the Eraser tool and click at the point where you want to remove the line. To move the line to a different area, click the Move tool and drag the line. 4. When you are finished using the Line tool, just press the Esc key or click the Line tool again. 5. To fill a selection with color, click the Paint Bucket tool and select a color. Your image will be filled with that color. 6. If you want to fill a selection with black, right-click in the image window and select the white fill option. You can also use an eyedropper to fill the selection with a color. 7. Just press the Alt/Option key and click the Make Selection tool to place a selection around any area of the image. You can then either choose to paint with the Selection Brush tool or deselect the area by pressing Shift and clicking the Selection Brush tool again. 8. Just as with the regular Brush tool, you can use the Eraser tool to erase the selection. Basic Photoshop Techniques: Light and Shadow Photoshop has its own light and shadow tools that are essential to the toolbox, but aren't always used by novice or intermediate users. To add light and shadow to an image, select one of the following tools: * The Gradient tool * The Spot Healing Brush tool * The Healing Brush tool * The Clone Stamp tool * The Background Eraser tool * The Dodge and Burn tools Begin by opening your image. Many of the shapes and areas of your image will have shadow. To add shadow to an image, you can use any of the tools listed earlier in this section. 1. The Gradient tool allows you to adjust the intensity of light and shadow in any area of your image. This tool is a good choice for quick adjustments. 2. To select
