I have a directory in Finder. I want to open the file selected by the Finder's Open button using a specific program (so that I can edit some data stored in the selected file, and then change the file back to the directory). How can I do this? Thanks! A: From The Finder: In the Finder, select the desired file using the Finder's Open button, and then press the Space bar or Enter (new in Yosemite) to invoke the Open dialog. Click the Save to Desktop button to save the file to your desktop. If you want to open a file with another application, use the Open With... option from The Finder or from within that application. Q: How to listen to mouse coordinates on a motion listener? I have 2 custom classes which implement the MotionListener interface (the correct one, I suppose) and each of them has a setter method for setting the bounds, here is the code for the first one: public void setBounds(e79caf774b
