Rear face of a ceramic piezoelectric transducer resonator. In the present work, we theoretically and experimentally explore the behavior of a single-piece, half-cylindrical, ceramic piezoelectric transducer (PT). The piezoelectric PT is an omnidirectional, single-piece, RF generator whose first output is a radiofrequency signal with a bandwidth of approximately 1 GHz and a center frequency of approximately 1.8 GHz. A finite element method is applied to the electrical model, based on the theory of piezoelectricity, to analyze the single-piece PT for a wide range of frequencies between 0.05 and 10 GHz. Both the numerical and experimental results show that the PT reaches a resonance maximum above a specific frequency. The maximum response is located at the middle area of the rear face of the PT, away from the two edges. The maximum response is approximately 12% of the middle area. The electric and mechanical field distributions at the maximum response are also discussed.Q: Change input type to radio, but keep the number and star rating I'm having a bit of trouble changing a label and input to radio buttons, but keeping the number and star rating.
