Synthesis and bioevaluation of 4-substituted thiosemicarbazones as potential antimicrobial agents.

5-(4-Chloro-3-methoxyphenyl)thiosemicarbazone (3), 5-(3-bromophenyl)-thiosemicarbazone (6) and 5-(4-nitrophenyl)-thiosemicarbazone (7) were prepared.

Antibacterial and antifungal activities of the thiosemicarbazones and 5-methylthiosemicarbazone (1) were evaluated against clinically important bacterial and fungal species. Compounds 3, 6 and 7 showed beta regulates surfactant protein B synthesis in alveolar type II cells. Transforming growth factor-beta (TGF-beta) has been shown to modulate surfactant production in alveolar type II cells. However, the mechanism of this modulation is unknown. Because surfactant protein B (SP-B) mRNA is more highly expressed in TGF-beta1-treated type II cells, we explored the regulation of SP-B gene transcription by TGF-beta. TGF-beta stimulation of RLE-6TN alveolar type II cells increased SP-B mRNA levels in a time- and concentration-dependent fashion. The increase in SP-B mRNA levels was evident as early as 3 hours after treatment and was apparent at 1 ng/ml TGF-beta. The increase in SP-B mRNA levels after TGF-beta treatment was blocked by addition of anti-TGF-beta antibodies, and a transcriptional inhibitor, 5,6-dichloro-1-beta-D-ribofuranosylbenzimidazole (DRB). Northern blot analysis demonstrated that a 4.7-kb SP-B mRNA transcript was induced by TGF-beta 1 in a time-dependent fashion and that SP-B mRNA levels were enhanced as early as 5 hours after TGF-beta treatment. Nuclear run-on analysis indicated that SP-B gene transcription was increased 5 hours after addition of TGF-beta. Studies on the 5'-flanking region of the SP-B gene revealed that 1) multiple activating sequences (5'-AAA-3' and 5'-TTCC-3') are located in the core region of the gene and 2) TGF-beta receptor signaling modulates SP-B gene transcription by increasing the affinity of the SP-B promoter for nuclear factors. These results demonstrate that TGF-beta 1 regulates SP-B gene transcription through enhancing SP-B gene promoter
