on coverage and that coverage was used by Wagner to influence the response to the Plaintiffs' grievance. In my view, the evidence adduced at the evidentiary hearing establishes the existence of a causal connection between Brian Wagner's alleged retaliatory conduct and the Plaintiffs' filing of their grievance. Accordingly, I would hold that a material issue of fact exists regarding whether Brian Wagner's alleged retaliatory conduct was a substantial motivating factor in a covered event, namely the Plaintiffs' filing of a grievance. Therefore, I would conclude that summary judgment cannot be granted to Brian Wagner on the Plaintiffs' retaliation claim. For the reasons stated, I respectfully dissent. NOTES [*] Justice BENDER would have granted review. [1] This Court has previously considered a state employee's "fraudulent inducement" claim in an appeal from an order granting the employee's petition to reinstate his disability retirement. See Davis v. Dep't of Corrections, 811 N.E.2d 792, 794 (Ind.2004). But see id. at 797 (Boehm, J., dissenting) ("By implication, the majority allows a state employee to proceed on a separate fraudulent inducement claim in addition to the reinstatement claim contained in the same petition.") (emphasis in original). We also previously considered the issue in an appeal from a separate order granting the state employee's petition for benefits, but the parties appealed separately and we dismissed the appeal without opinion as moot. See Cleland, 796 N.E.2d at 710 (Boehm, J., dissenting). [2] Subsequent to the filing of the Plaintiffs' grievance, the parties entered into an agreement. The Plaintiffs agreed to withdraw their first grievance and the Department agreed to cease its implementation of the bonus plan. See Appellant's App. p. 3. Although, to this day, the bonus plan has not been implemented, it is not a part of this appeal. [3] Although Brian Wagner argues in his Motion to Dismiss that Indiana Code section 4-15-1-7.1 provides the exclusive remedy, Wagner does not present any argument as to why the fraudulent inducement claim is preempted by the Whistleblower Act. Therefore, Wagner has waived the issue. See Edwards v. DeCastro, 832 N.E.2d 1274, 1277 (Ind.Ct.App.2005) ("Issues that

Oyster Oyster is a type of shellfish. Its scientific name is Crassostrea gigas. The shellfish has a pear shape. The texture of its meat is similar to that of calamari. It is the type of bivalve found on rocky or sandy shores. It lives in both salt and fresh water, and can grow as large as 50 cm. The six to eight or more shells are called valves. When the oyster is newly born, the valves are closed, attached to each other at the hinge line, using epiphytes (rosette shaped organelles) to hold them together. During the course of its life cycle, the oyster builds cement around the hinges so that it is not able to close its valves and will die if it does so. Oyster shells are used in many artistic and utilitarian objects. There are many different species of oysters, each with different qualities, characteristics, and colors. Waterfront Festival Waterfront Festival is a music festival hosted by the National Aquarium in Baltimore. It is held annually and takes place in May or June. It features bands from around the world, some of which are visiting the Baltimore area for the first time. Acts like indie band The Walkmen have won the Waterfront Festival's 'Best Emerging Band' award. History The festival was first held in 2000 and has been held every year since, most recently in 2013. In its early years, the festival was held in the Inner Harbor. The festival moved to a new location, Perry's Landing on Belle Haven in 2002, and then Inner Harbor Park in 2003. In 2008, the event moved from Inner Harbor Park to the North Cove Marina in Oxon Hill. The event is produced by Streetsense. The festival has always had a stand up comedy competition. One past winner was Ed Schoenfeld, who won the 2003 Comedy Showdown Contest.
