All of us know very well about smartphones, tablets, GPS, and the applications (apps) which are built on it. For us to see smartphones and tablets in field, they are merely extending the desktop computing power. What we are seeing is what the technology is capable of, but the limits to the technology are very clear and limit what it is capable of. I was at Osugbo, Lagos last week, and it is the usual first world problems of bad signal, a slow connection, and other technical things that make us experience it is not the same way as many of our great great great grandfathers experienced it, and it is very humbling for us to witness a new device which helps connect people far away, makes travel easy and enjoyable, and communicate with each other anywhere we are. I was in one of the places (the bamboo village in Osugbo) and the only way to connect to the internet was through the kiosk that was there. I did not need to 3a67dffeec
