WinRar is a file archiving and compression tool that is developed by program developerLarge granular lymphocyte (LGL)-associated vasculitis. Large granular lymphocytic (LGL) neoplasms are a small and heterogeneous group of neoplasms that are classified mainly on the basis of morphological features. Both hyperacute and chronic forms have been described. LGL-associated vasculitis has been reported in one case, but this has not been previously reported in the UK. A patient is described who developed vasculitis associated with the proliferation of monoclonal T cells and the expression of LGL surface markers. It is proposed that the disorder be classified as LGL-associated vasculitis, and that this should now be included in the literature.

This invention relates to a print material development unit and in particular a print material development unit for use in an apparatus for making a number of prints from a single image. In the printing and graphic arts a number of different processes are available for rendering the final image onto a print medium. Examples of these processes are dot-on-a-paper printing and the projection of an image onto a screen. In each case it is necessary to transfer the printed or projected image from its originally positioned position to the final print medium. Print material development devices in current use generally require a separate step, such as the use of a common tray for receiving printed copy or an image projected onto the screen, for the subsequent development of a number of copies of a number of print jobs. This is a time consuming and inefficient technique and there is a need for a simple device which can perform the various development steps for a number of print jobs in a single step. By way of background to the present invention reference may be had to U.S. Pat. No. 4,712,252 which describes an image processing system having a number of output stations which are provided for the simultaneous processing of a number of print jobs to be produced from image data provided by a raster image processor and comprising a drop station for developing a first print job and a further station for developing second and third print jobs with respective developing units coupled to the drop station. The drop station and the further station are arranged in a comb-like configuration so that the print material is moved serially to any one of the output stations and therefore cannot be used for processing a number of print jobs simultaneously. There is also an apparatus in U.S. Pat. No. 4,212

Australia's peak business lobby group has backed the Rudd government's controversial mining tax, but recommended a "maiden mission" by the Abbott government to campaign for a referendum in the lead-up to the 2016 federal election. The Australian Industry Group, the Federal Chamber of Commerce and the Australian Council of Trade Unions will today release two market-monitoring reports on the mining and water pollution tax which will be released to the media. The tax, a levy on iron ore and coal-mining profits, will be introduced by the government on July 1 this year, and is projected to bring in an additional $2 billion in revenue over the forward estimates, including the resources sector. Industry, business lobby group Aussies for Health (Image: Screen Shot) The key report will look at the potential impact of the tax on the private sector economy, particularly with respect to jobs, the mining industry and the national budget. The Group Chief Executive Peter Anderson said the industry had not yet been given the final parameters for the impact of the tax, but it had been told the tax was "on the horizon". "Obviously we want to make sure we have a fair tax system in place," Anderson told AAP. "We want to make sure that the government can, and will, take the right steps to balance the budget. The mining tax (Image: Screen Shot) "Certainly we're concerned about all forms of taxation and we're concerned about the mining tax." The mining tax is not a property-tax, but is a revenue-raising measure similar to the one that the Gillard government introduced at the time 0cc13bf012
