Research shows that to lose weight, it doesn't take a diet of nothing but cabbage and protein powder. You can eat potato chips and cream cheese too! I recently found myself in a "diet" environment again. I was shopping for a dress for a wedding and ended up in the section where many, if not most, dresses are sold. I don't really like looking at dresses, but I was in the mall anyway, and figured I'd browse around. As I walked by the section where the dresses were located, I couldn't help but notice that the sizes they were sold in were completely different than the sizes they were actually made in. I'm a sizes 24E-28DD. That's I'm the largest I can go in my bra and I'm pretty darn tall. So most designers make my size in a dress, but in the dress section, they don't make any sizes larger than an 8. I tried on a few dresses and told the woman I was surprised that the size 24E was just too large. She said she didn't care, and would have to let the designer's size me. To me, size 24E was way too big, but she informed me that it was on the label. I ended up taking a few dresses home with me, and when I got home, I tried them on and realized that those labels really were what they claimed they were, even though the dress was not that big at all. The label actually stated that the size I had was the "incorrect size." I'm surprised I noticed at all since the notion of being "made" doesn't really seem to exist in my life anymore. 1.1.1.4-10 Do the first 10 commandments still apply today? We all know it's true.
