John is looking forward to a week off work, but his bosses decide it's a perfect opportunity to review the latest design requirements for the company's product. They are going to print up a huge bookshelf for the review, and they decide to have a quick prototype made so that they can evaluate it in person before deciding if it's a go. They send John to a local print shop to get a perfect bookshelf made, only to discover that it's been a big hobby project for a local artist. The print shop owner uses a book-spanning printing press that uses individual pages to print off line, and the artist had gotten caught up in the adventure. The amount of time to print out a single page is... Turns out, the bookshelf can be printed in a single day. Each of the printed pages is separated by hand from the other pages by the artist.
