Ponder For Chrome For Windows [Updated] 2022

Keep a diary in your browser As soon as you install this add-on in your Chrome browser, your New Tab page is replaced with a new customized one, where you are invited to enter your name. Next, you are asked to choose the type of writing you are mostly interested in, such as daily productivity, daily lists or daily reflection, along with creative, self-reflection or free texts. All the data you enter is save locally, so you can rest assured that your privacy is protected. You can also activate a reminder so you do not forget to create content for your blog or your online accounts (such as Facebook, YouTube, Twitter, Reddit or Pinterest). Explore your progress and statistics Once you have created one or more entries, Ponder offers you the possibility to explore previous notes and maybe even continue writing if you are feeling particularly inspired. A progress chart is also generated and you can view information such as how many you words you have written today or the current week, along with the longest streak. You can jump directly to a certain day using the integrated calendar. Additionally, Ponder offers you the chance to get familiarized with several hotkeys and quickly skip a prompt, take a break or start writing as soon as you open a new tab. Is there a way to remove this whitespace? A: You need to use the caption_separator option. How should captions be separated? This option accepts a space-separated list of strings that will be used as a separator between the captions. Demo You can also customize the separator text by using the caption_separator_text option:

Ponder for Chrome is a simple and intuitive add-on to quickly write down your thoughts, ideas and observations. Create a weekly and daily blog using the prompts you get from Ponder.[Inhibition of GSH and GSH-linked enzymes by cycloheximide and actinomycin D in isolated rat hepatocytes]. GSH and GSH-dependent enzymes were studied in isolated rat hepatocytes preincubated with cycloheximide and actinomycin D. The most pronounced effect was observed on the activity of glutathione reductase. In the presence of cycloheximide the inactivation of this enzyme was not associated with a decrease in the content of GSH, but with a marked fall in the content of the enzyme's molecular forms. A decrease in the content of the molecular forms of the enzyme was also observed in the presence of actinomycin D. In both cases this effect was manifested by a decrease in the activity of glutathione reductase. The content of the GSH-linked enzymes (glutathione peroxidase, glutathione transferase and gamma-glutamyl transferase) decreased during the preincubation with cycloheximide. In the presence of actinomycin D, the content of these enzymes decreased as well, although this decrease was accompanied by a decrease in the activity of all the enzymes. The data obtained suggest that the synthesis of the GSH-dependent enzymes occurs in the presence of cycloheximide and the synthesis of some forms of glutathione reductase in the presence of actinomycin D.Progressive, progressive Reaction to a statue recently placed near the site of a tragic fire in Stamford, Connecticut was emotional. Some gave a knee-jerk "we need to tear it down." Others declared it was a "beautiful" work of art. Some worried about the interpretation. Did the statue merely express remorse for the fire that killed three and injured 70? Or was it, as some suggested, merely an "oblique commentary on the dangers of rapid development and the exploitation of the environment?" As other reactions have pointed out, this statue was not a gift from a rich patron. It was built with the cooperation of the working class union, and funded by the regular workers and regular people. The union men and women, firefighters, members of the citizens committee, and even members of the city government participated. 2edc1e01e8
