On Monday, the city Council unanimously passed an ordinance making those words illegal in public, and the mayor signed the bill into law. The law applies only to Philadelphia, but it's hoped it will put an end to some of the hate-based verbal assaults - including the use of racial slurs in conjunction with violence - that have occurred at sports events. "This was a real crime issue that was tolerated over a long period of time," said Councilman Dalesandro. "It was a blight on our society." Philadelphia is the first city in Pennsylvania to outlaw the use of racial slurs in public, and the first in the nation to ban them in sports-related venues. The law has been approved by the Pennsylvania attorney general, and it will take effect June 13. It applies to all public schools, streets, highways, public transportation vehicles, sports venues, stadiums, parking lots, public parks, playgrounds, sidewalks and public rights of way. The law prohibits anyone from using racial slurs in public and f988f36e3a
