I am glad the new features integrate well into the workflow and we can use where needed. My concern is the performance changes and lack of UI enhancements.

Overall, more can be done to make the UI seem so "user friendly" (like a better warn answering application). The increase in performance has seemed to be a decrease in overall user experience. Being a photographer, I am easily annoyed when my application can't keep up with me.

Imaging software works best when it is able to provide feedback without hindering its own workflow. The ability to easily select candidate photos, apply effects to a locked group, and immediately see "a preview" of my work is where the benefits of the software really come in to play. Wasting time trying to do multiple selections, apply duplicates, add new layers, re-import files, or apply filters as I am able to through a tool like lightroom is no longer have a valid argument for me as a user. Altering the safeties, modifying the internal tables, or changing a filter's settings is very important to be able to actually USE my software without it just becoming a hindrance.

If I had to choose between being able to use the new tools but having to deal with the performance hit or keeping the UI the same, I'll take it every time. We are all aware that our impatience can be easily exploited (delete filters? Why not add a new one?), and changing the UI every time we want to update Lightroom is not something I would recommend to my users.

I still would like to see a major revamp/change of the UI though. I haven't really heard anything on this topic in a while, and it seems to feel like it is at a standstill for the LR community. Things have been going great since 4.5, and I think the community would be able to handle a UI revamp if one was available.

The next version of Lightroom would probably need to be more than a minor upgrade. I don't think we should have to make some drastic changes every time we as a community want to throw in a feature that is available in ICC profiles that we know is promised to us later. Perhaps they could be promised this with ISO profiling being the next big thing in Lightroom.

We are not asking for things that are unreasonable or unachievable.

Good Luck to the team for the new version.

Most of us have pets. If you're a cat person, there are times my kitty cat will sit on my desk and bat at the folders I have placed on the table. You can't avoid the situation. The new Adobe Photoshop Camera Raw 11 is here for these situations. It now has the ability to detect areas in the image that are cat lit, changes the colors to a more natural palette automatically, and converts the colors to black and white in another space. If you don't want the picture with your cat's fingernails splayed out in the foreground, like a sculpture, you can crop the image. The new photo organization and intelligent file display indexes include the lighting patterns, so you can access files that are most relevant since most edited images have some kind of lighting change including portrait. This enhances your workflow and allows you to access files more quickly and find the specific one you may need urgently, helping to speed up your workflow. "In Photoshop we're focused on empowering people to create and share the images and graphics of their dreams," said David Wadhwani, senior vice president and general manager, Adobe Photoshop and Creative Cloud. "We're continuing to take advantage of new technologies to deliver breakthrough features that make it even more intuitive and effective to work with Photoshop no matter where you are or how you choose to work."

To simplify graphic layouts and create a more efficient workflow with Photoshop, the new "Share" feature allows users to continue editing a Photoshop file long after the initial asset creation – even in a browser. Seamlessly sharing and previewing artwork in the browser provides a faster and more efficient way to collaborate with team members across different devices. Users are also enabled to select for review, review and approve a specific area of a file to easily ensure changes were approved before sharing.
