The current facility provides statistical and bioinformatics support to members of the Udall Center Grant for a wide variety of scientific endeavors, including preclinical/clinical studies, research projects, and pilot projects. The goal of this facility is to provide scientific information and statistical expertise to the Center Grant, and to provide a central place for the development of new statistical methods, use of emerging techniques, and application of cutting edge technologies. It has been a remarkably successful service to the Udall Center Grant, and we anticipate it will be even more successful in the next five years. The CBiS Director and staff are fully committed to this cause, and will continue to provide timely and cutting edge support to our Udall Center Grant colleagues. An additional goal of the CBiS is to develop research interests for new scientific leaders in the field of addiction treatment. The CBiS has excellent collaborations with researchers at the University of New Mexico, the Las Vegas Clinical Research Center, and the University of Maryland, as well as other collaborators.The present invention is directed toward the art of electrical connectors, more particularly, connectors for coaxial cable
